Catholic Education is Priceless

Catholic Education and Its Influence on Me

By Sarah Cornwell '12

For the past four years I have been blessed to be a member of the faith community at Regina High School. As I walk through the school doors every morning, I know that I am in the house of God. Christ manifests himself in the students, faculty, and activities at Regina.

One way religious education has influenced my life is through the enrichment of my faith. At Regina High School I have come to learn the importance and the power of prayer. Regina has instilled in me a need to pray and talk to God. My faith has also been deepened because of the many opportunities to attend Mass and confession.

Regina High School has also influenced my life by encouraging me to live out a life of service. Every semester Christian Community Service hours are due. This ensures that the students are contributing to their communities as a Servant Leader, just as Jesus served. Regina promotes serving one another within our school. Such groups include Eucharistic Ministers, Peer Ministers, and the St. Clare Franciscan Society Group, all of which I am a part.

A final way in which my religious education has influenced me is through the assistance in discerning my vocation. Over the past couple of years I have had a strong yearning to become more unified with Christ. Beginning freshman year, the thought of becoming a religious sister was always in the back of my mind. In the classes at Regina I have learned much more about the religious life and what steps to take next.

My religious education at Regina High School has thus enriched my faith life, encouraged me to live out a life of service, and assisted me as I discern my vocation. I have become a proud Catholic ready to take the next steps in my faith life. I feel that Regina High School has prepared me very well for my future. I thank God every day for obtaining the privilege to attend Regina High School because I know what a blessing it is.

Something to Share with My Regina Friends

By Stephanie Berger '02

I'm a graduate student at Wayne State University studying for my Masters in Industrial/Organizational Psychology. I am currently taking an Organization Theory class on Monday evenings with the professor who is also the I/O program coordinator and advisor. The lecture finished a little early the other night and the professor started talking about Wayne State and how the government has been asking the school to "graduate more students." The question on everyone's mind was how?

He started by asking the class what made them decide to go to college. Some said because it was expected of them, some said to get a job. I said "Those things are true for me as well but what it really comes down to is the fact that I just want to learn. As long as I can remember I've wanted to learn as much about the world as I possibly can." The professor said, "Yes. A student has to WANT to learn. They have to have that drive within them."

So a few years back the President of the University went to my Professor and asked him for his opinion on the matter. How do they graduate more students? My professor is a leader in the field of organizational research and knows a lot about statistics and trends. His answer was not exactly what I was expecting but it's something that I think you will find quite interesting.

He said, "If you really want to graduate more students... recruit more high school students from ALL GIRL CATHOLIC HIGH SCHOOLS. They are the ones who are most likely to graduate." I immediately chirped up and said "That's me!" My professor said "Well, I don't know what they are doing to you over there in those schools but the numbers don't lie."

Maybe those are the students who have the drive within them or maybe the schools help them to find that drive. Either way, give yourselves a pat on the back and a round of applause because whatever it is you are doing, it's working. Bravo.

"Transforming Girls Into Women of Faith and Vision in the Franciscan Tradition"

Dear Friends:

We celebrated Catholic Schools Week at the end of January. My thoughts went back to when I attended elementary and high school on the lower East side of Detroit. There were a number of Catholic schools not more than ten or fifteen minutes away from our homes which made it possible for most of us to walk to school. Where are these schools today? Is yours still open? How times have changed!

We do not need educational researchers to tell us that something is special about Catholic Schools. If we look at the many contributions the Catholic Church has provided in society, certainly Catholic Schools are among the greatest. What could be more important than striving to pass on the faith to the next generation?

At Regina High School we believe that Catholic identity resides in the people who compose the school community. Our dedicated administrators, teachers, many supporting staff members, and most importantly the young Christian women in attendance, manifest the presence of Jesus within themselves and because of this, a truly vibrant Catholic school community exists. We welcome opportunities to continue our spiritual formation; we recognize that providing a superior education is a matter of justice; we regularly show how gospel values affect all areas of life; and we reach out to those who are different because they are our brothers and sisters.

We are fortunate to be able to continue our Catholic Mission and Ministry in Warren. We believe that our gift to the nation is the demonstration that people of diverse backgrounds and experiences can come together and live and work and pray in peace and harmony because of a common set of beliefs. There is a saying that a home is a house with a heart. I believe that Regina is filled with Christian individuals who show love, are concerned, and witness their belief in Jesus. Together, we make up the heart of Regina High School.

It is with gratitude for your past support and with confidence in your on-going support that I ask you to join us in investing in the future of our children. Given the challenges many of you face, I understand that everyone cannot participate at the same level. A charitable donation is a voluntary personal decision and I pray that your decision is to make Regina High School's Mission and Ministry one of your priorities.

Gratefully,

Sr. Mary Leanne

Stephanie Shevenock, a Regina High School graduate of 2008, is a mechanical engineering major at Lawrence Technological University. She is one of the 25 students nationwide who have won a scholarship and summer internship for the 2011-2012 academic year from the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA). Shevenock will receive $15,000 per year to cover tuition costs for two years and a $10,000 stipend during an internship next summer with NASA.

Shevenock is a member of Lawrence Tech's Aero Design SAE team that has finished in the top 10 in national competition for the past two years. She has been named team captain for the 2012 team. She is president of the Lawrence Tech chapter of the American Institute of Aeronautics and Astronautics, and earlier this year went to Washington, D.C., as a student lobbyist for Citizens for Space Exploration.

"NASA is Stephanie's dream job and one of the key reasons she is studying engineering," said Associate Professor Andrew Gerhart, Lawrence Tech's SAE Aero Design faculty advisor. "She has worked very hard to obtain the NASA scholarship and internship, and will represent Lawrence Tech extremely well." God Bless you Stephanie as you embark on your dream!

Dollars for Scholars Award

The Michigan State Circle of the Daughters of Isabella selected Regina High School to win this year's "Dollars for Scholars" award. At the end of the Catholic Schools Week Liturgy, Mrs. Helen Anonick, State Regent of the Daughters of Isabella, presented Sr. Mary Leanne with a check for $1,000 for the school's scholarship program.

As part of their mission, the Daughters of Isabella support the intellectual and spiritual component offered by Catholic schools in helping to form and make strong young Catholics. They believe that our youth is our future and the investment in a Catholic education is priceless! Sr. Leanne graciously accepted the award and pledged that Regina High School would continue to prepare young women to be a light in today's society.
